National Parent Involvement Day

Here’s what parents can do at home:

- Plan – make sure your children are rested and ready to learn — school attendance is critical for academic success.
- Play – a family night to play games that help your children to read and practice basic math facts and computation skills.
- Talk – ask about your child’s day at school, and don’t take “nothing” for an answer.
- Look – check your child’s work as it comes home and review homework together.

Here’s what teachers can do in the classroom:

- Relate – communicate with parents about good news via notes, e-mail, or phone calls.
- Participate – attend your school’s events; it’s a wonderful way to meet other parents and families.
- Team up – partner with other teachers, staff, and parents to create policies, practices and programs to make success real and available to all students.

Here’s what staff and administrators can do in the school:

- Create – make your school a warm and welcoming place for parents, families and community members.
- Invite – extend an open invitation to parents to visit the classroom and join you for school events that are linked to learning.
- Encourage – establish and grow a community of learning by supporting teacher- and parent-led events that bring parents and educators together to support student success.

Join us in recognizing the valuable partnership between parents and educators!
